CARR CENTER
FELLOWSHIP OPPORTUNITIES
2012 - 2013

The Gebran G. Tueni Human Rights Fellowship

Area of Concentration: Human rights issues associated with the Middle East.

Details: The Gebran G. Tueni Human Rights Fellowship was created to support the scholarship of human rights practitioners from Lebanon and Iraq. While advancing their own work, the fellows participate in the broader dialogue of human rights with Harvard students, faculty and researchers. The fellowship runs from September 1, 2012 through June 30, 2013.

Eligibility: Candidates will be selected from a pool of English speaking scholars, journalists, writers, human rights activists or social scientists, from any ethnic or religious denominations, who have shown a demonstrated commitment to human rights and social cohesion in the Middle-East. Preference will be given to candidates who are human rights practitioners from Lebanon and Iraq. In the event that eligible candidates from Lebanon and Iraq cannot be identified, fellowships may be awarded to candidates from other Middle Eastern countries. Preference will also be given to well qualified candidates whose area of study/expertise coincides with Carr Center Programs and Initiatives.

Expectations: Tueni Fellows will undertake a major research project focusing on a pressing human rights issue in one or more countries in the Middle East region. As with all Carr Center Fellows, Tueni Fellows are expected to contribute to the Center's programs, and participate in broader dialogue with students, faculty and researchers in the Harvard community. In particular, Fellows will be expected to lead at least two public seminars and be involved in the student community in some capacity, for example, by leading a study group or advising students.

Application Period: January 1, 2012 to March 31, 2012.

Funding Status: Stipend available for up to two (2) fellows.
