List of Contributors

Sean Aday is Assistant Professor of Media and Public Affairs at the George Washington University. His research on media effects, political communication, and public opinion has appeared in Journal of Communication, the Harvard International Journal of Press/Politics, The Annals of the American Political Science Association, and Presidential Studies Quarterly.

Ted Brader is Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science and Associate Research Scientist, Center for Political Studies, University of Michigan. Ph.D., Harvard. His research and teaching interests include public opinion, media effects, political psychology, campaigns and elections, and political parties. Although most of the work is in American politics, his general concern with questions of political behavior invites research in comparative politics as well. Professor Brader is currently writing a book on the impact of emotion in campaign advertising.

Paul Brewer is Assistant Professor of American Politics at George Washington University. His research on American public opinion, political communication, and political psychology has appeared in the Journal of Politics, Political Communication, Political Psychology, the Harvard International Journal of Press/Politics, and elsewhere.

Robin Brown is Senior Lecturer in International Communications at University of Leeds and Director of the Institute of Communication Studies. He is Chair of the International Communication section of the International Studies Association. His current research focuses on the impact of communication technology on international politics. His publications include From Cold War to Collapse: Theory and World Politics in the 1980s (Cambridge University Press, 1992). [Co-editor] as well as articles in Information, Communication and Society and the Journal of Information Warfare.

Tim Cooke is Head of Broadcasting at BBC Northern Ireland responsible for commissioning and scheduling all television, radio and online programming. Previously he ran the BBC's newsgathering operation in Northern Ireland. In spring 1998 he was a Goldsmith Fellow at the Joan Shorenstein Center, John F. Kennedy School, Harvard University.

Mansour O. El-Kikhia, is Associate Professor of Political Science at University of Texas, San Antonio. Ph.D. University of California at Santa Barbara. Dr. El-Kikhia teaches courses in International Political and Economic Relations with special emphasis on the Middle East. His latest work is Libya's Qaddafi: The Politics of Contradiction (1997).

Anat First is Associate Professor of Mass Communications at Netanya Academic College and she also works as a lecturer in the School of Journalism and Mass Communications at Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Her main interests are in the role of the media in constructing reality and the representation of the "other" in the media, especially women and Arabs.

Stanley Feldman is Professor of Political Science at Stony Brook University. He has published extensively in the fields of political psychology, public opinion, and political communications.

Kimberley Gross is Assistant Professor of Media and Public Affairs at the George Washington University. Her research on political communication and public opinion has appeared in the British Journal of Political Science, Political Psychology and Journal of Communication.

Leonie Huddy is Associate Professor of Political Science at Stony Brook University. Her fields of interest are political psychology, public opinion, and intergroup relations. She is co-editor of the Handbook of Political Psychology (2003), and Research in Micropolitics: Political Decision Making, Deliberation, and Participation (2002). She has also published in many books and journals, including articles on public reactions to 9/11 in Public Opinion Quarterly and Political Psychology.

Amy E. Jasperson is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at University of Texas, San Antonio. Her research focuses on political communication, especially political advertising and political campaigns. She has published in journals such as the Journal of Advertising, Political Communications, and Polity.

Marion Just is a Professor of Political Science at Wellesley College and a Research Associate at the Joan Shorenstein Center on Press, Politics, and Public Policy at the Kennedy School of Government. Her research focuses on politics and media. She is a co-author of several books, including Crosstalk: Citizens, Candidates and the Media in a Presidential Campaign, Common Knowledge: News and the Construction of Political Meaning, and The Election of 1996 as well as numerous journal articles and contributions to edited volumes.

Montague Kern is Associate Professor of Journalism and Media Studies at Rutgers University. She is the author of Thirty-Second Politics: Political Advertising in the ’80’s (Praeger-Greenwood 1989), and is co-author of Crosstalk: Citizens, Candidates and the Media in a Presidential Campaign (University of Chicago Press 1996). She coauthored (with Patricia W. Levering and Ralph Levering) The Kennedy Crises: the Press, the Presidency and Foreign Policy (University of North Carolina Press 1984). She is also the author of numerous journal articles and book chapters in the field of media and elections and the press, the presidency and foreign policy.

Gallya Lahav is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the State University of New York at Stony Brook. She works on international migration and European integration and her articles have appeared in several books and journals, including Comparative Political Studies, the Journal of Common Market Studies, Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies, and Global Governance. Her book, Reinventing Borders: Thinking about Immigration in the New Europe, gauges 20 years of public opinion and elite attitudes towards immigration in a Europe of changing boundaries (Cambridge University Press, 2003).

Tamar Liebes is Professor and Head of the Department of Communication and Journalism, Hebrew University. She has written extensively on the viewing of popular culture and coverage of terrorism in the Middle East.

Frank Louis Rusciano is Professor and Chair of Political Science at Rider University and a former visiting Professor at the University of Mainz. His books include Isolation and Paradox: Defining "the Public" in Modern Political Analysis (Greenwood, 1989), and World Opinion and the Emerging International Order (Praeger, 1998). His articles have appeared in journals such as the International Journal of Public Opinion Research, Comparative Politics, Current World Leaders: International Issues, Western Political Quarterly, and The Harvard International Journal of Press/Politics.

Todd M. Schaefer is Associate Professor of Political Science at Central Washington University. His research interests are in the areas of elite political rhetoric, mass media, political communication and public opinion, and his work has appeared in journals such as Political Communication and Journalism and Mass Communication Quarterly.

Oscar Torres-Reyna is Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Political Science at Columbia University.

Charles S. Taber is Associate Professor of Political Science at Stony Brook University. He is interested in cognition, affect, and political decision-making, and has published widely in the fields of foreign policy decision-making, public opinion, and political cognition, including in the American Political Science Review, Political Psychology, and Political Analysis.

Michael W. Traugott is Professor and Chair of the Department of Communication Studies, University of Michigan. His research interests include the mass media and their impact on American politics. He focuses upon media coverage of political campaigns and the impact they have on voter behavior, use of the media by political candidates, and the use of political surveys and polls to cover campaigns and elections. Professor Traugott is a past president of the American Association for Public Opinion Research. In 2000, he published his ninth book, The Press, The Polls and Democracy.